The coming shake-up in the Census Bureau and the probable discharge of about a thousand of the clerks will strike many of the Virginia clerks who have positions in that bureau. In consequence of the exhaustion of the appropriations the Superintendent of the Census is compelled to reduce the force. It will go very hard with the women in this bureau. They make more money by being employed by the Government than they could earn anywhere else, and besides the hours are shorter and the duties quite pleasant. They can dress nicely, and many a tear will be shed on the lat of July when "the girls" get notices that their services are no longer needed by Uncle Sam. The Superintendent is being overrum with appeals in behalf of this one and that one, and his own life will be a burden between now and the first of the month. The expense of taking the eleventh census has been enormous, and to complete it will require still larger appropriations. The next House will be slow, however, to vote additional funds, and before any step is taken the chances are that the Democrats will want explicit statements as to how the money has been spent, where the clerks officers.

SEVERAL DAMAGE SUITS.

[Special telegram to the Dispatch.]

Lynchropo, Va., June 13.—From the weather-crop bulletin of the Virginia State Weather Service in co-operation with the United States Signal Service, for the week ending June 12, 1891, the following summary has been condensed from the reports of volutary crop correspondents of this service: The temperature throughout the State has been about normal during the week, which has had a beneficial effect upon all crops; except in a few places, an average amount of sunshine has prevailed, which with the normal rainfall has materially assisted the growth of corn and tobacco-plants and the maturing of wheat. The prospects for a large tobacco crop. stated by them: STATEMENT OF THE PRISONERS, These two gentlemen who, from the evidence before the Mayor, are men of standing and respectability in their own State, graduated a short time ago at a medical college in Memphis, Tenn., and then went to New York city to attend a post-graduate course at one of the leading medical colleges and hospitals in that city. They arrived in Norfolk on Friday, June 12th, and took the train leaving Norfolk at 10 P. M., going west. They were provided with tickets in proper form. When the train stopped to take on coal at a shute a mile or two below Wakefield, in Sussex county, Dr. J. C. Merriwether, the oldest of the two brothers, went out on the platform of the car in which he had a seat to get some fresh inch.

The rules of the railroad company are that no passenger shall remain upon the platform when the train is in motion, and the law makes the conductors conservators of the peace on their trains. Captain Farrar's statement could not be obtained, but from those who heard his account of the affair it is learned that while exercising his authority to get Dr. Merriwether from the platform he did not use any undue torce; that when he spoke to the Dector to go into the ear the latter replied that he would go when he got ready; that he was struck violently in the month, and that his life was threatened by the two brothers, and that further trouble was feared from them unless police authority was called in. His residence, at the corner of St. Matthew and Melville streets, is a two-story building. During a debrium resulting from acute suffering, and while the members of his family were temporarily absent from his side, he left his bed and went through the window of his chamber on the roof of the side, he left his bed and went through the window of his chamber on the roof of the porch, from which he fell to the ground. His absence was discovered almost immediately, and when search was made for him he was found lying upon the ground in a helpless condition. He died a short while after being brought back into the house. No bones were broken, but internal injuries were sustained, which caused his death. Deceased was between fifty and sixty years of age, and leaves a widow and several children.
